

Question 1

Fill in the blank: A malware infection is an incident type that occurs when _____. 1 / 1 point

malicious software designed to disrupt a system infiltrates an organization's computers or network

a computer's speed and performance improves

an employee of an organization violates the organization's acceptable use policies

a website experiences high traffic volumes

Correct

A malware infection is an incident type that occurs when malicious software designed to disrupt a system infiltrates an organization's computers or network.

Question 2

Fill in the blank: Improper usage is an incident type that occurs when _____. 1 / 1 point an employee that runs an organization's public relations posts incorrect data on the company's social media page an individual gains digital or physical access to a system or application without permission malicious software designed to disrupt a system infiltrates an organization's computers or network.

an employee of an organization violates the organization's acceptable use policies

Correct

Improper usage is an incident type that occurs when an employee of an organization violates the organization's acceptable use policies.

Question 3

When should you escalate improper usage to a supervisor? 1 / 1 point

Improper usage does not need to be escalated because these are in-house scenarios that can be handled without reporting them to the security team.

Improper usage incidents should always be escalated out of caution.

Improper usage attempts that affect high-priority assets should be escalated; other improper usage instances are not as important.

Improper usage incidents should be escalated if there is a high level of improper usage.

Correct

Improper usage should always be escalated.

Question 4

Fill in the blank: Unauthorized access is an incident type that occurs when _____. 1 / 1 point

an employee of an organization violates the organization's acceptable use policies

malicious software designed to disrupt a system infiltrates an organization's computers or network

an authorized employee sends a job description to a friend before the job description has been released to the public an individual gains digital or physical access to a system, data, or an application without permission

Correct

Unauthorized access is an incident type that occurs when an individual gains digital or physical access to a system, data, or an application without permission.